WORKING BLUEPRINT

Using your notes from the previous pages, use this space to create a summary of what you have learned, discovered or remembered about your most joyful expression, purpose and success.

It may help to refer back to the two versions of Designing Your Creative Dharma that you did in Week 1 and Week 3.

Then compile a succinct list or paragraph that feels like a crystallisation of your most valuable insights, your most meaningful criteria and your most exciting visions for the future.

Congratulations!

You have now completed your first working draft of Your Creative Dharma blueprint.

How do you feel?!

Make a note of how you feel about this process, and/or how you want to feel as you design, plan and live this powerful vision.

You can then use this as an additional reference point when making decisions or updates to your blueprint in the future.

Remember : this is a working document.

And it's all yours.

It is your vision and blueprint for your life, work and purpose.

So, amend it, change it, scribble all over it as much or as little as you feel inspired to do.

And revisit it often.

You may want to print out a version you feel happy with and keep it somewhere handy.

My hope is that it will become a touchstone for your creative path and a guidance tool for your most joyful purpose and success.

Enjoy!

When I'm designing, planning and living my Creative Dharma, I feel...

Being able to imagine something new is a kind of miracle...
